

A quarterly session which looks in detail at the latest developments in company law, corporate governance and related business regulation

Company law and regulation is not a static thing: it changes and evolves and influences – and is influenced by – corporate behaviours in the real world. Keeping track of those changes as they happen, and anticipating and preparing for compliance, can be a major challenge for any business.

This quarterly half-day session is aimed at equipping company secretaries and other senior and board-level advisers with the information they need – when they need it. Updated with every session, the course combines a broad-based overview of the unfolding legal, regulatory and governance environment with more in-depth coverage of some of the key changes and what they mean for business.

This course is available on an individual session basis, or on a rolling 4-sessions subscription.

Programme

This course is a quarterly update on the latest developments in company law, corporate governance and related business regulation, and as such the final programme for each session will not be finalised until close to the running date.

Typical areas examined in recent sessions have included the following:

- Implementation of the Companies Act 2006
- Developments at Companies House
- The shareholders' rights regulations
- The new UK Code of Corporate Governance
- The Walker Report on governance in the financial sector
- The ICSA Board Behaviors Report
- The latest proposals from the European Commission
- Changes to the listing regime
- Developments in financial reporting

Registration and tea/coffee for this course typically starts at 09.00, and the course finishes at 12.30.
